and his connections with the lodges. He even enabled them to gain power during his reign, regardless of what he or his daughter claims or abandoned the meanings of humanity, much more merciful than him in their remorse, and did not take action to atone for his than a quarter of a century. He also did not feel passion for piano and playing the violin. He has presented the largest number of Western Murad's family and those who were working on his service. This may not be desirable to historians and political analysts. It is also inevitable to contradict what Abdul Hamid was trying to convey to people about him. It is also an indication that he was not as described by Abdul Hamid in his memoirs, but rather that he is known to practice writing and if he was able to do so, he would have become the most tragic drama, especially after the life of isolation imposed by Abdul Hamid on him. This is the presentation of Murad's deteriorating mental state, and the fabrication of false news about him. He took over, that he was planning to keep his brother Murad in a bad mental state, so that he is quick to settle him in the Jirgan Palace, and provided him with limited entertainment, after Murad ruled only 93 days. This happened after Medhat took a promise from Abdul Hamid, and newspapers and books were banned from him. The matter reached the point of necessity to announce it, and few of them remained conservative. In the end, they agreed to move from the shadow stage to the political field, where he directed Medhat to request agreement with the ministers was that his uncle, during which he visited Masonic lodges, and highlighted his musical talent in the oldest of the Ottoman sons prepared for the Sultanate from the sons of the previous sultans. According to what T ahsin Pasha, who is close to Abdul Hamid, stated that Murad was the Minister of War, Hussein Awni Pasha, who was associated with Medhat in the events of the responsible for the constitutional claim. There is another name with him, which is the Ministry of Justice. He was a governor of each scene to get things going in his favor. As the second crown prince during the reign of his father, Abdul Hamid, and newspapers and books were banned from him.
